2012 Summer Flood FAQs

Northeast Minnesota

(revised as of June 23, 2012, 5:15 pm)

The Northeast region partners have compiled the following information for victims of the 2012 Summer Flood. Regional partners have developed recovery tools and resources for residents. The following information will be followed by more detailed information shortly.

Residents should keep these general tips in mind as they return home or work towards recovery. In general, residents should stay away from hazardous materials, water, and propane tanks. Please follow the following safety measures.

- Standing water may be unsanitary water
- Raw sewage and septic failure is evident, avoid contact if possible
- There are unforeseen hazards and loose debris
- Stay away from propane tanks. If you find a tank on your property, contact your local propane retailer to remove the damaged or dislodge tank due to the flood.
- If you see or smell anything dangerous, call 911.

Information for Private Residential Properties

- When can I return home?

Safety is of the utmost importance. Assessments of the flood ravaged areas are being conducted on a frequent basis by local authorities. Residents should contact their local law enforcement or designated emergency management personnel for updates. Generally following a flood, residents will be able to return home after water recedes and when authorities deem the area safe. Residents should keep in mind that flooding may have compromised foundations or load bearing walls. Use extreme caution when entering flood damaged buildings.
